

HONEY PRODUCING CHAMP

ST. EDWARDS, Neb. (UP)—Eli-mer Kennedy, of near here, is re-puted to be Nebraska's greatest honey producer. Kennedy began commercial production of honey 18 years ago and now has 800 colonies of bees, split into several yards scattered along the Bearer valley. The production of his hives averages more than 100,000 pounds yearly.

HEN MOTHERS CHICKS

MONTROSE, Colo. (UP)—Prefer-ting to be a foster mother to cats rather than chickens, a hen on the Ralph Nash farm chucks in a mo-therly way to a young brood of six kittens. The hen was unable to hatch chicks of her own and picked these Nash sought to have her adopt until they had to be taken away.

ABOUT TATTOOING

LONDON (UP)—Writing in the British Medical Journal, Dr. Rose Jordan recalls the good old army adage that tattooed men are pro- tected against infectious tropical diseases and raises the question of whether this is merely superstition "or does the impregnation of the skin by these dyes really afford any protection?"

The same section contains also the following statements from Science and Health: "Mind is God.
